Instructional materials open house

View French, Advanced Placement Studio Art and Psychology materials being considered

Every year, teachers review instructional materials to evaluate how well they support teaching and learning state standards, course objectives, course themes, and content. This year the focus is on French language, Advanced Placement Studio Art, and Psychology courses. Teams of teachers are evaluating how well these materials support teaching and learning state standards, 21st century skills, course objectives and content.

Now the teams want to know what you think of the materials. On Wednesday, March 13, at the Community Resource Center (3900 Broadway, Everett), from 3-7 p.m., students, families, staff and community members are invited to explore these materials and leave written comments. The adoption teams will review all feedback as part of the instructional materials review process.

"We are excited to share the materials we are reviewing," said Georgia Lindquist, who oversees humanities and literacy curriculum in the district. "We get valuable perspectives from the open house sessions and it's always a pleasure to share with others the options students have today to learn, including access to online resources that high school students can access with their own laptops."
