Cheri Lovre talks about coping and healing after school violence

Session for school staff, first responders, community, and parents Wednesday, Nov. 5 at 9 a.m. Register online

"It will be easy enough to fall into fear ... to ask ourselves how we can insulate ourselves and our children from any possible threat.

We will either stand together and face that which has the potential to be so fearful, or we will fall one-by-one as victims to that fear.

We as a community will need to come together, to heal together, to move forward together. All of the bars, metal detectors and security guards in the world can't protect us.

Only acting together in community with our neighbors can do that."

*Father Dennis Bosley
St. Martin's Episcopal Church
Moses Lake, February 1996*

These almost 20-year-old words still ring true today as we deal with the aftermath of the Marysville Pilchuck High School shooting. As Father Bosley said, we can heal by coming together.
