Korean delegates visit View Ridge Elementary

Principals-in-training from Korea glean lessons from American school

An interpreter's voice hummed through a wireless listening system and into the ears of 30 Korean delegates as they visited View Ridge Elementary School on October 12. Sponsored by the Korean government, the visiting educators were assistant principals training to become principals of schools in Korea. View Ridge Principal Kert Lenseigne led the group through a model American school.

The group walked the halls of View Ridge, learning about the educational programs, afterschool activities, budget, parent involvement and school operations. View Ridge staff and students welcomed the visitors as they passed by their classrooms. The delegates were impressed with the beauty of the school, but most of all, the students. One delegate commented, "The students are all so nice and friendly!"
