EHS students set example and say thank you!

What better way to inspire high school graduation aspirations among elementary kids than to see “big kids” bring teachers to tears!

Rampant tears and big bear hugs were the actions of the morning on June 8 as Everett High School almost-graduates walked the halls of Jackson Elementary in caps and gowns.

The reason? They wanted to say “thank you” to the elementary teachers who helped build the academic foundations for their high school success. A bonus of the venture was the wide eyes and admiration high school kids got from elementary students fired up to graduate in a few years.

Jackson kindergarten teacher Theresa Lusier, gets hug from one of her now grown-up former students.

Principal Sally Lancaster said Wednesday’s trip to Jackson was a “test drive” for other such visits in the future. “The students wanted to see those ever-important elementary teachers again, and we wanted elementary students to get up close and personal with high school students flush with the excitement and energy of graduation.”

EHS counselor Gretchen Stiger went along for the trip and said, “I couldn’t think of a better way to start a work day!”

Everett High senior Cierra Felder, who will major in Business Management and Marketing at Eastern Washington University enjoyed, “...seeing all the teachers who are still there and the ones that came back just for this parade. I didn’t think they would remember me.”

Felder says she can remember wanting to go to college when she was in elementary school, but not thinking about it a lot. She added, “If I’d seen a parade like this when I was in elementary school, it would have been inspiring. This puts the idea of graduation into the minds of the little kids.”

- Emily: "It was nice to see the graduates when they walked through the halls, and I pictured what it will be like when I walk through the halls."
- Rory: "I liked imagining what it will be like when I graduate from high school."
- Amirre: "I remembered when I graduated from preschool and got my preschool diploma."
