This year, teachers are evaluating instructional materials for Spanish language and psychology classes. Teams of teachers are reviewing how well these materials support teaching and learning state standards, 21st century skills and course objectives and content.

Now the teams want to know what you think of the materials.

On Tuesday, March 20, at the Community Resource Center (3900 Broadway, Everett), from 3-7 p.m., students, families, staff, and community members are invited to explore these materials and leave written comments about them. The adoption teams will review all feedback as part of the instructional materials review process.

"We are excited to share the materials we are reviewing. We get valuable perspectives from the open house sessions, and it's always a pleasure to share with others the options students have today to learn, including the digital and online resources," said Georgia Lindquist, who oversees humanities and literacy curriculum in the district.
