

How local schools performed in student testing

Here's a district-by-district look at the results from the spring Measurements of Student Progress test and the High School Proficiency Exam. The MSP is administered in grades 3-8, while the HSPE is given in 10th grade. Each is compared with the prior year's results on the Washington Assessment of Student Learning, or WASL, which is no longer being taken. The numbers represent the percentage of students who passed the tests in each grade. To search for an individual school's results, go to www.k12.wa.us and click on "State Report Card."

Local schools on federal watch list

Here's a list of schools that are part of a federal watch list under the No Child Left Behind law. Schools land on the list for a variety of reasons. A drop in the passing rate for the student body puts a school there. So does the failure of a specific segment of students, such as English language learners or special education students. Schools receiving Title 1 funding risk losing that money after landing on the list.

Note: AYP stands for adequate yearly progress. Title 1 refers to schools that receive extra federal funding based on percentages of low-income students.
