MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENTS

The Co$T of College

A common myth about college is that it's too expensive. The biggest part of college costs is usually tuition. Tuition is the price you pay for classes. Other costs include fees, books, room and board (meals), living expenses, and transportation.

Financial aid is money to help pay for college. It comes from the federal and state governments, colleges and universities, banks, and organizations. Most students receive some kind of financial aid to help pay for the cost of their education, including:

- Scholarships are money for college given by businesses, individuals, organizations, or universities to students with good grades, athletic ability, community service or other qualities.
- Grants are called gift aid because grants do not have to be paid back if students successfully complete the courses in which they were enrolled. They are usually based on your family's financial need (or what your family can afford to pay).
- Loans are borrowed money from a bank, government or lending company. It must be paid back with an extra charge called interest. The federal government offers low-interest loans to students with financial need.
- Work-study jobs pay you for part-time work, often on campus.

With financial aid, many students are able to earn their degrees. In fact, most full-time college students receive some type of financial aid. Most students only pay about 60 percent of the advertised price of a four-year college, once grants are included (and don't forget about scholarships!).
