College Applications: Essays & Interviews

When you apply to college or a training program, you will need to complete an essay as part of the application and you might be asked to come to an interview. These are opportunities for you to show admissions officers who you are and to provide information that did not fit in other areas of the application.

The essay also reveals what you can do with time to think and work on a writing project. The number one piece of advice from admissions officers about this essay is "Be yourself." The number two suggestion is "Start early." Check out these other tips so you know what to expect.

The college interview is another possible part of the college application process. Not all colleges have them. If the college or program you are applying to does, you could be meeting in person to talk with the admissions office, a current student or a graduate of the college. Or perhaps, you might even have a video interview, often via Skype.

The interview is rarely the deciding factor in whether the college or program will accept you, but it can give a representative from the college or training program a chance to get to know you better giving you an opportunity to:

- Show an interest in the college or training program.
- Share information beyond what's listed on a transcript.
- Bring up anything in a record that you'd like to explain, like a temporary drop in your grades.
- Discuss future goals and the reasons to attend
- Ask questions about the college or training program.

Did You Know?

A wide range of scholarships are available to Washington students. Although scholarship application processes are competitive, many are targeted to students based on their interests, desired campus or major, or their background. Students should register on www.theWashBoard.org to be matched to scholarships in WA. Of the nearly 500 scholarships listed on theWashBoard.org in 2011-12, only one out of ten required a GPA higher than 3.0.
